

Translab Technologies - Work from Home Policy

1. Introduction

Effective Aug 30th 2023, Translab Technologies Pvt Ltd will be discontinuing the work from home policy. Going forward, remote work arrangements will only be considered in rare cases where exceptional circumstances prevent an employee from physically attending the workplace. This policy outlines the new guidelines and procedures for requesting and approving limited work from home arrangements.

2. Eligibility

Limited remote work arrangements will only be considered under exceptional circumstances that make it impossible for an employee to be present in the office. Examples of such situations include serious health issues, urgent family matters, or extraordinary events that prevent an employee's physical presence at work.

For Project Managers or any other employees who occasionally visit client locations, please make sure to share your timesheet with your manager after the client visit, and ensure the timesheet is approved.

3. Approval Process

a. Submission: To request a limited work from home arrangement, employees must submit a formal request to their reporting manager. The request should include a detailed explanation of the exceptional circumstances, the anticipated duration of remote work, and a plan for managing job responsibilities.

b. Reporting Manager Approval: The reporting manager will review the request based on its merits and alignment with the organization's needs. They will consider the impact on team collaboration, job responsibilities, and the overall work environment.

c. Final Approval: If the reporting manager approves the request, it will be escalated to the next level of management for final approval. The organization retains the right to grant or deny the remote work arrangement based on its assessment.

d. Timesheet: Once approved, ensure that your timesheet accurately reflects your work hours, whether you are working from home or the office.

4. Remote Work Guidelines

a. Work Hours: If a limited remote work arrangement is approved, employees must adhere to their regular work hours as defined in their employment contract, unless otherwise agreed upon with their reporting manager.

b. Communication: Remote employees must remain accessible during working hours through appropriate communication channels (e.g., Teams, email, messaging, phone). Regular communication with the reporting manager and team members is essential to maintain alignment and ensure that work progresses smoothly.

c. Work Responsibilities: Employees are responsible for managing their job responsibilities effectively, even while working remotely. The quality and timeliness of work should not be compromised.

5. Termination of Remote Work Arrangement

Translab Technologies Pvt Ltd retains the right to terminate a remote work arrangement if it is no longer justifiable or if the employee's performance is compromised.

6. Amendment of Policy

Translab Technologies Pvt Ltd reserves the right to modify or update this policy as needed. Employees will be informed of any changes.

By submitting a request for limited work from home, employees acknowledge their understanding of and commitment to adhere to the guidelines outlined in this policy.
